About the Author

James Edwards III grew up in a small Polish community that was liberal in their thinking. This allowed his imagination to flourish as a child. It was evident he would be a person of creative arts.

Edwards began writing in the 1980s, a 25 page booklet titled "How About Modeling," and entered a short story writing contest for Ebony magazine. This later rolled into writing for the college newspaper because of his major of Broadcast Communication. He was also a UAW Union Representative. Edwards wrote for the union paper, drawing on his past experiences in writing. He broadened his horizons into songwriting and singing. By way of fate, Edwards became an actor and a model and was cast in T.D. Jakes' Sparkle.

Now, Edwards is finally fulfilling his destiny of his high school exchange teacher from England who gave him an A in high school, which Edwards hadn't had since elementary. This teacher told Edwards he should write for a profession. So Edwards wrote this novel, The Other Life of Mary Abrams.
